Understanding Tariff Classifications

At the heart of international trade lies the classification of goods under the Harmonized System (HS) code. The CFR Title 19 provides detailed guidance on determining the appropriate HS code for each imported product. This accurate classification is crucial for determining the correct duty rates and other applicable regulations.

The volume includes a comprehensive list of HS codes, organized by product type and description. It also offers valuable insights into the interpretation and application of these codes, ensuring that goods are classified consistently and accurately.

Calculating Customs Value

Another essential aspect of international trade is the determination of customs value. The CFR Title 19 outlines the various methods for calculating the value of imported goods, including transaction value, deductive value, and computed value.

This section provides clear instructions and examples to guide professionals through the process of selecting the appropriate method and calculating the correct customs value. It also addresses specific scenarios and exceptions, ensuring that valuations comply with international trade agreements and regulations.

Import and Export Procedures

Import Procedure in India

Obtaining the Import Export:

One must obtain an Import Export code (IEC) number from the DGFT. The process takes between 10 to 15 days.

Ensuring legal compliance:

Comply with various trade laws and obtain the necessary licencing from DGFT and the federal government whenever required.

Classifying Import Licenses:

Classify the imported goods according to the Indian Trading classification as every class of goods may have differing regulations.

Filling the Bill of Entry & Relevant Documents:

A "pass out order" is issued once customs officials have checked the bill of entry with the actual imported items and found no irregularities.

Determining the Import duties to clear goods:

Basic custom duties, as well as integrated GST Tax are imposed.
